

CONTRIBUTORS

Randall P. Donaldson (Ph.D., The Johns Hopkins University) is Associate Professor of German at Loyola College in Maryland. His work in German-American studies to date has centered around the radical journalist, Robert Reitzel. He is currently working on a supplement to Dieter Cunz' landmark volume, The Maryland Germans.

Gary C. Grassl has published articles on a variety of topics in numerous journals. In 1999 he was honored by the Society for German-American Studies for significant work in the field, particularly his efforts in seeking recognition of the contributions of German-Americans in early colonial Virginia.

Bradford W. Miller (M.A., George Washington University) has done considerable research on the life of German-Americans in the nineteenth century in the District of Columbia. He helped secure the approval of the State of Virginia to erect an historical marker in historic Jamestown commemorating the arrival in 1608 of German craftsmen in Jamestown Colony. He is currently secretary of the Washington, D.C. area unit of the Steuben Society.

Hans A. Pohlsander (Ph.D., University of Michigan) is a native of Germany but a long-time resident of the United States. He is emeritus professor of classics and religious studies at the University at Albany, State University of New York. His principal publications are Helena: Empress and Saint (1995) and The

Emperor Constantine (1996). He is a newcomer to German-American stu-

Helene M. Kastinger Riley (Ph.D., Rice University) is Alumni Distinguished Professor of German at Clemson University, where she has taught since 1985. She has published extensively on a variety of topics involving German literature. In her work on German-Americans, she has focused on German immigration to South Carolina and produced a number of very informative and well-received multi-media presentations, websites, and videos on

William Roba (Ph.D., University of Iowa) received his doctorate in 1979) and has specialized in German-American Studies for the last twenty years. His interest in William F. Cody was sparked by local concern over his early years as a boy in eastern Iowa. He is Treasurer for the Society for German-

Manfred Zimmermann (D.Phil., Universität Marburg) is Associate Professor of German at the University of Cincinnati. Although he trained as a specialist in the Middle Ages, where his main research interests still lie, in recent years he has branched out into the field of German-American Studies. He currently serves on the Executive Board of the Society for German-American Studies.