

CONTRIBUTORS

Randall P. Donaldson (Ph.D., The Johns Hopkins University) is Associate Professor of German at Loyola College in Maryland. His work in German-American studies to date has centered around the radical journalist, Robert Reitzel. He is currently working on a supplement to Dieter Cunz' landmark volume, The Maryland Germans.

Gary L. Grassl was a writer and editor with the U.S. Department of the Interior and the U.S. Department of Education for more than twenty-five years. He has published articles on a variety of topics in numerous journals. In 1999 he was honored by the Society for German-American Studies for significant work in the field, particularly his efforts in seeking recognition of the contributions of German-Americans in early colonial Virginia.

Timothy J. Holian (Ph.D., University of Cincinnati) is presently an Assistant Professor of German at Missouri Western State College (St. Joseph, MO). Much of his scholarship to date has focused on the importance of the German element to Cincinnati as one of the most prominent German-American settlements in the nation. His previous work in the field of German-American internment includes numerous public lectures, a doctoral dissertation, and a book, The German-Americans and World War II: An Ethnic Experience, which is now in its second printing.

George F. Jones (Ph.D., Columbia University) is Professor Emeritus of German at the University of Maryland, College Park. He is a Georgian by birth and a medievalist by training, and his more twenty-five give witness to both heritages. In the field of German-American studies, he has devoted himself for many years to research on the Georgia Salzburgers.

Martin Lorenz-Meyer is a doctoral candidate in American and European history at the University of Kansas, where he studies with Theodore Wilson. He is currently working to complete his dissertation on the "Safehaven" operation, an attempt by the western allies towards the end of the Second World War to locate financial and other assets the German National Socialists had tried to hide in neutral countries.

Peter C. Merrill (Ph.D., Columbia University) is Professor Emeritus of Languages and Linguistics at Florida Atlantic University, Boca Raton, Florida, where he taught a course on German immigrant culture in America for many years. He has published more than thirty articles dealing with such topics as German-American literature, German immigrant artists in the United States, and the German-language stage in America. His biographical dictionaries on German-American artists are valuable reference works in the field.

Ruth and Eberhard Reichmann (Ph.D., Indiana University and University of Cincinnati, respectively) are a team both personally and professionally. They have worked together for many years to make German-American cultural studies a part of the curriculum in a number of schools and colleges. They have published, both together and separately, in the area of cultural education and German-American studies and are much sought after as speakers and workshop coordinators.

Contributors

Klaus Wust is an independent researcher and consultant in cultural and immigration history. He is well known to members of the Society as the long-time editor of the Report and to many in the field of German-American studies as a renowned expert on German immigration to America and the author of The Virginia Germans.